Political spat after 'too posh' planning decision

By Dean Kilpatrick

dean.kilpatrick@archant.co.uk

TORIES at Medway Council have defended their affordable housing record after Labour accused them of being "too posh" for rejecting development plans in Brompton.

Labour councillors have accused members of the planning committee of snobbery after rejecting planning permission for nine affordable houses as part of a 34 home site in Amherst Hill.

All new developments require a share of affordable houses, and although it is not uncommon for affordable housing to be reallocated to another site, no proposal was made to re-allocate that space.

Labour's Cllr Nick Bowler said: "The Labour members will never support this. There are 10,000 people in Medway who are on the waiting lists for housing."

However the Conservative group have hit back, insisting their record is better than the required 25 per cent figure, and insisting their record "speaks for itself".

Cllr Jane Chitty said: "Like most things the Labour group have failed to appreciate the wider, strategic picture and have once again chosen to go down the route of petty and unnecessary name calling."

"Medway's Conservative administration is committed to the provision of affordable housing."

TELEVISION

WHERE THE HART IS

SCENES for the second series of a popular television drama have been filmed at the Historic Dockyard.

Call the Midwife, which stars comedian Miranda Hart, used the historical site for the first series and has returned to Medway for the second time.

The location is used primarily for outside shots, with its buildings replicating the 1950s setting of the drama.

Filming finished late last week, and the series is expecting to hit our screens next week.

Speaking earlier in the year, Miss Hart said: "It's filmed on such a lovely scale - they've done it beautifully."

Secret drugs factory discovered after neighbour's complaint

AN underground cannabis factory containing nearly 100 plants has been discovered by police officers.

Plants with an estimated street value of between £45,000 and £90,000 were discovered at a disused barn in Cliffe after police officers obtained a search warrant.

The authority was alerted to the factory in Salt Lane after a resident contacted his neighbourhood PCSO to complain about a generator which was constantly running at the back of an apparently rundown barn.

However, thermal image cameras were used to detect heat patches and a trap door which led to a secret bunker full of cannabis.

Kent Fire and Rescue crews were also sent to the scene to stabilise the crumbling ceiling which had been damaged by the drugs operation.

The cultivators have not been found, and despite having lived in mobile homes on the site, they were never seen on the land.

Medway's detective inspector Geoff Payne said: "After initial investigation, the PCSO suspected something was going on and it was then that we uncovered what was happening at this site.

"It was well thought out and extensive work has been carried out to create this underground factory."

"They had dug the base of the barn out and put containers in and a ceiling, leaving a manhole cover to gain access in and out."

Anyone with information can contact Kent Police on 101.

Former Pfizer site transformed into post-apocalyptic horror set as Brad Pitt drops in for filming

By Dean Kilpatrick

dean.kilpatrick@archant.co.uk

A FILM crew behind Hollywood hunk Brad Pitt's upcoming blockbuster movie have been filming at disused laboratories in the county.

The team behind post-apocalyptic horror movie World War Z shot scenes at the Pfizer site in Sandwich.

Based on a critically-acclaimed book, the zombie movie is understood to already be a year behind schedule and the recent filming in Kent were re-shoots for key parts of the flick.

It comes a year after plans were shelved for Mr Pitt to spend time in Tunbridge Wells shooting scenes of the movie at a disused supermarket.

The film crew pulled out after local newspapers leaked the news, prompting fears the set would be disrupted by fans eager to catch a glimpse of the superstar.

Instead, the crew shot scenes for the zombie film in Glasgow.

A spokesman for the Kent Film Office, which promotes the county to movie studios, says it was unaware of the filming as it was all shot on private property.

Discovery Park opted not to comment when contacted.

The film is now expected to be released next

June as a summer blockbuster.

Mr Pitt, whose partner is superstar Angelina Jolie, is frequently voted Hollywood's hottest lead male and has appeared in movies such as Fight Club, Troy, Mr & Mrs Smith, and Seven.

STAR: Brad Pitt's latest film is World War Z

STAFF at Faversham brewers Shepherd Neame have joined Movember - the annual charity push to raise awareness of male health and cancers.

The firm is an official partner of the scheme and this week saw male staff shave ahead of growing their moustaches for 30 days to raise money and awareness for men's health issues.

It has also put a limited edition Movember Spitfire ale on sale.

➔ Fraudster sentenced

A 55-year-old woman has received a suspended three-month jail term after admitting claiming more than £28,000 in benefits fraudulently.

Jennifer Ibrahim-Kori, who now lives in Gibbons Road, Sittingbourne, had failed to notify authorities of a change in her circumstances.

She received the suspended sentence, a 12-month supervision order and 60 hours community service after appearing in court this week.

Efforts to recover the money will now begin.

➔ Promise of 3,000 jobs

AMBITION owners of the ex-Pfizer site in Sandwich have pledged to create 3,000 new jobs at the newly-named Discovery Park by 2017.

In February 2011, the area was left devastated when the US drugs giant announced it was pulling out of the 300-acre site. Now it hopes to benefit from Enterprise Zone status and various investment schemes.

Homeless bird swears he'll be colourful entertainment

A FOUL-mouthed bird with a taste for human flesh is up for adoption.

So long as you don't mind enduring a string of expletives during the day and the odd peck if you get too close, you may be interested in taking on Beaky, a chattering lory who is more bad bird than angry bird.

He didn't just get his name from his blue language, but because he also enjoys biting people he doesn't really know.

The lory is a parrot-type bird, but the RSPCA warns that the new owner needs to not only be pretty broadminded, but also expert in the care of exotic creatures.

Beaky is currently in the care of the RSPCA Leybourne Animal Centre, in West Malling. His favourite curse is the dreaded F-word, along with 'ahole' and he likes to call everyone 'stupid'.

Staff said he actually has a very large vocabulary and repeats most of what he hears.

A spokesman said Beaky is an intelligent and playful bird who is a good mimic

but has picked up some colourful language.

He enjoys the company of people, but staff warn he may bite at first until he has formed a bond with someone.

Also up for adoption is Captain Scarlet, a crimson rosella, another type of parrot-looking bird. He is pretty small and loves to whistle. He arrived at the centre as a stray and would be best suited to an aviary as he has had little interaction with people.

Angelina Lusher, supervisor at the RSPCA centre, said:

"We've tried our usual contacts to re-home them with responsible and experienced owners, but still need to find them good new homes."

"Both are beautiful birds, but please only come forward if you have experience in keeping exotic species like these as we need to get them the best homes possible with plenty of species-specific enrichment, space and interaction with people or other birds to give them a fulfilling life."

Anyone interested can phone 0300 123 0751.

Time running out for high streets as parking costs drive customers away

By Marijke Cox

marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

SHOPPERS faced with rising parking charges are voting with their feet and boycotting some of Kent's high streets.

Anxious traders fear this could be the final nail in the coffin for high street businesses which are already competing with out-of-town shopping centres, and they are appealing to councils to stop pushing up fees.

Just this week, shopkeepers in Folkestone reported a staggering 35 per cent drop in takings since new parking charges were introduced in September.

Shepway District Council brought in pay-and-display machines where parking was previously free for an hour.

Folkestone Town Traders carried out a survey of 130 shops to highlight the damage it had done.

"Eighty per cent of businesses within the town and parking scheme boundaries are 30-40 per cent down on footfall and takings," said a group spokesman.

"Some are a lot worse. National stores comparing sales at sister stores in local towns near to Folkestone are reporting healthy growth."

Shepway's head of communities Bob Porter said the council had committed to reviewing the scheme after six months, but would consider the latest findings as quickly as possible.

He added: "As parking remains free in prime shopping streets and as we have cut car park costs, we are surprised traders are reporting a drop in trade over the past month."

"In fact, over the same period, there has been a 22 per cent increase in the number of cars using our Folkestone town centre car parks – that's at least 2,400 more people."

But it's not just Folkestone that has seen changes to parking.

Earlier this year, Gravesham increased its previous £1 flat fee for four hours up to £2, and scrapped free Saturday parking.

Civic society Urban Gravesend said it was having a negative impact on trade. A petition was launched calling on the council to reintroduce free Saturday parking, collecting 6,000 signatures.

A spokesman for the group said: "Local shops and businesses have been hard hit by the parking fees and we believe the council could now afford to drop Saturday charges in order to encourage shoppers and visitors into Gravesend."

JUST THE TICKET, OR CUTTING LIFEblood OF TRADERS?

CHIEF executive of Kent Invicta Chamber of Commerce, Jo James, said: "Town centre parking is a contentious issue with a number of ramifications which generate a variety of opinions."

"The economic viability of high streets depends entirely on the number of customers, and the number of customers is to a large extent dependent on the convenience of access."

"The high street as we currently know it is undoubtedly under threat from out-of-town retail centres and from online shopping facilities."

"Whatever the measures town centres have taken to compete with this opposition, a crucial aspect has to be the provision of adequate parking facilities – and a lack of those facilities must surely impact on customer footfall."

"I am aware many town centre traders are concerned about parking charges, and especially concerned about the rising cost of parking. However, to maintain existing facilities, and – importantly – to expand those facilities for further customer convenience, is expensive."

"Parking facilities, either local authority or private, have to be paid for one way or another."

"Another facet of the argument is from the perspective of the customer. Really, just how expensive is parking?"

"If you need simply to pop into the bank or return a library book, it can seem considerable – but seen as a percentage of what you might spend overall on a shopping trip, it is pretty insignificant."

"So, a contentious issue, and one that needs sorting out. We live in a free market economy, but whose free market is it?"

"Should we look at the freedom of those providing parking facilities to charge an economic rate, the freedom of the trader to rely on good customer footfall, or the freedom of the customer to enjoy cheap parking?"

But members of Gravesham council voted against cutting parking fees.

Sevenoaks District Council looks set to vote in favour of bringing in increases in 2013, of 10p and 20p depending on the length of time parked, and drivers buying annual tickets could see a rise of £10.

The Lib Dem group has launched a petition against the increases.

Chairman Roger Walshe said: "We believe that is the wrong course of action when our high street is already suffering and needs more, not fewer, visitors."

Prices in most town centres have risen or are being increased on average by 10-20p an hour, and residents' permits have also increased, although this varies across the county.

But councils have defended the rises, with many blaming associated costs in running car parks.

Rises have been seen in Canterbury, and in the Dover district drivers have seen the amount of time they can park for their money cut in some car parks, and long-stay fees increased by 50p.

Medway has also agreed to push up fees by 20p. This followed a three-year freeze and the council vowed to implement that freeze again between April 2013-2016.

The council said: "This rise still means that Medway will have cheaper car parking than many other authorities in Kent."

NEWS IN BRIEF

➔ Miranda films in town

BBC film crews were at Chatham's Historic Dockyard this week, shooting scenes for popular TV drama Call the Midwife, starring Miranda Hart.

The show is no stranger to the location, having shot scenes at the site before. Executive producer Pippa Harris said: "It allowed us to bring a real sense of scale to the production and glimpse what it must have been like to work alongside a busy dock in the 1950s."

➔ Facebook teacher plea

A BIG push is being made to attract high-flying teachers to come and work in Kent, amid fears the county is missing out on some of the top talent.

Kent County Council has launched the Your Perfect Kent Day campaign via Facebook after concerns teachers were looking to the higher salaries offered in London. However, union chiefs say the county's selective system deters many from teaching here.

EMERGENCY SERVICE

New fire stations to be built, just months after closures

FIVE new fire stations are to be built across Kent – just months after a number of part-time facilities were closed due to cutbacks.

Following a countywide review by Kent Fire and Rescue Service (KFRS), stations are to be built in Ash-cum-Ridley near West Kingsdown, Ramsgate, Rochester, Gillingham and Herne Bay, to ensure "modern day needs" are met.

However, the news comes after stations in Halling, St Margaret's-at-Cliffe, Sturry, Matfield, Queenborough, Rusthall, and Seal, were all closed in April as part of the service's plans to make £7 million of savings by the end of 2013-14.

The decision was made after Kent and Medway Fire and Rescue Authority said it had seen a 25 per cent drop in the number of fires and other incidents since 2005.

KFRS has looked at a number of ways of cutting its cost after the service was warned that government funding could be cut by as much as £12m over three years.

And although the fire service's element of council tax has been frozen for the last two years, it has not ruled out the possibility of increasing it by up to two per cent depending on its next batch of government funding.

However, it is believed an increase would only set back an average band D house 3p a week.

Kent and Medway Fire and Rescue Authority chairman Bryan Cope said: "We are putting the foundations in place to build a service ready to meet the changing needs of local people."

"That means we must look forward, modernise and if necessary take tough decisions, but always with one end in sight – the safety of local people. To do this, we are using cutting-edge technology to improve how we fight fires, giving our staff the best training and – to avoid fires and accidents in the first place – provide residents with essential information to keep themselves safe."

Other ideas outlined in the safety plan include investing in new vehicles and equipment to deal with inaccessible fires, as well as deciding to stop attending warnings from automatic smoke alarms unless a fire is verified.

The service says 98 per cent of call-outs triggered by the devices turned out to be false alarms, and were diverting rescue crews away from genuine emergencies.

KFRS has already stopped attending such warnings during the day, but from April, 2013, no automatic smoke alarm call-outs will be attended unless a fire has been verified.

The safety plan is now under public consultation until January 14, 2013, and the full report can be read at www.kent.fire-uk.org.

NATURE

Ash tree numbers may be decimated if wind blows in killer disease

By Dean Kilpatrick

dean.kilpatrick@archant.co.uk

KENT'S ash tree population could be left devastated by a killer disease that has wiped out 90 per cent of the species in Denmark.

Cases of chalara fraxinea infected trees have already been discovered in Britain, and there are concerns the fungus will spread to the county.

Tests have been carried out on sites across Kent, although no confirmed cases have yet been identified. Tell-tale signs of the disease include dieback of shoots and twigs, and leaves that are wilting and suffering black-brownish discoloration at the leaf base.

A Woodland Trust spokesman said: "The disease could be in any tree in the South East. It may be transmitted by human contact, but it's possible it is airborne. These questions need looking in to. It's going to be tough to see how far this disease has spread already."

It is believed the disease was brought into the county by ash trees imported from abroad.

The Government has imposed a ban on further ash tree imports and some 100,000 trees have already been destroyed across the country – with more suspected cases emerging on a daily basis.

DEADLY: Ban has been issued on ash tree imports

The Country Land and Business Association (CLA) South East regional director Robin Edwards said: "We are pleased the Government has acted and imposed a ban on imported ash trees."

But Labour MEP for the South East Peter Skinner said: "Unfortunately the Government has been asleep on the job. It ignored the Forestry Commission's warning there was no money to tackle tree disease, and cut its cash by 25 per cent."

Some 129,000 hectares of ash trees are planted across Britain, with thousands in Kent.

PEST CUTS FOREST DOWN TO SIZE

MORE than 2,000 trees and hedgerow trees have been chopped down, inspected and chipped by inspectors trying to eradicate Britain's first outbreak of Asian longhorn beetle.

The bug can quickly decimate huge areas of woodland and it's believed the Paddock Wood infestation was caused by the insects arriving on board delivery lorries with products from abroad.

The insects are highly effective at destroying trees; they burrow deep inside, lay their young and leave to take up residence in another trunk. The offspring then eat their way out, the trees quickly dying from the internal damage.

A fast and efficient method of ridding woodland of the beetle is cutting down the surrounding trees to eliminate their chance of spreading

The job of wiping out the Paddock Wood infestation, the first in the country, is down to the Food and Environment Research Agency.

A Fera spokesman said: "Around 2,000 trees and hedgerow trees have come down in the area."

Just a couple of months ago, 1,300 were brought down, but the zone was expanded. The agency is now confident it has the problem under control, but regular surveys will continue for years to come.

The spokesman added: "The felling operation has finished and we are now setting pheromone traps up to catch any beetles that may still be there."

"The area will be surveyed for the next four years so we can be sure we have controlled this outbreak."

TRANSPORT

Two-tier road tax concerns

IT HAS been claimed government officials are considering charging motorists who only used local roads a lower rate of Vehicle Excise Duty than those who use motorways.

But there are concerns smaller roads like the A2 and A20 could become congested.

The Association of British Drivers pointed to difficulties with the technology required, bureaucracy, and unfairness.

Kent spokesman Ian Taylor said: "This system would drive all the present motorway traffic on to the A-roads."

Imagine the lorries using Dover and the other ports avoiding the motorways to save on tax.

"And then add in all the cars and vans using urban routes and it will be a disaster. Drivers would have no incentive to use the motorways – they would just want to save money, which is completely understandable."

Some motoring groups predict motorway traffic would slump by at least a third.

Claims of the new system emerged as the Government struggles to make up falls in revenues from Vehicle Excise Duty.

REMEMBRANCE

Stand shoulder to shoulder with our heroes as Poppy Appeal is launched

By Marijke Cox

marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

THIS year's Poppy Appeal aims to raise a staggering £42 million to help the thousands of service men and women who have put their lives on the line in conflicts past and present.

And 2012 is even more special, with Remembrance Day falling on Sunday, November 11.

Remembrance – or Armistice – Day marks the signing of the Armistice, officially ending World War One, which occurred at the 11th hour of the 11th day of the 11th month in 1918.

It is usually held on the Sunday closest to November 11, except for special years such as this when it falls on the actual anniversary.

To mark this important date each year, the Royal British Legion – which provides help and welfare to serving troops in Afghanistan and other trouble spots, and the ex-service community and their families – holds its Poppy Appeal.

It was officially launched this week by veterans from conflicts past and present, who pinned a wave of large poppies onto County Hall in Maidstone. They called on people in Kent to honour the fallen and help pay for the care of the injured and their families, by pinning on a poppy.

Last year, the county's Legion raised a record £1,339,254, which helped to pay for grants – including one to a homeless former member of the Navy to pay for bed linen and food to help settle him into new lodgings.

Another grant was to an ex-service-man who suffered a knee injury in Iraq, to contribute towards a downstairs bathroom and bedroom.

Community fundraiser for the Legion's county branch, Clare Saunders, said the organisation had responded to more than 1,600 requests for help from veterans in the last year alone.

"This number is likely to grow in light of the current conflicts," she said. "More than £1.7m is spent each week on the Legion's work to help our Armed Forces family, that's £90m a year, answering more than 165,000 calls for help, so every penny the people of Kent generously give to our appeal is vitally important.

"Please stand shoulder to shoulder with all who serve by wearing a poppy this Remembrancetide. The Armed Forces and their families are pinning their hopes on you."

She said the Legion had supported the veterans who launched the appeal at County Hall this week.

"It is through money raised from our annual Poppy Appeal that we were able to offer them the support

A LAND OF RED

GREENHITHE'S local branch of the Royal British Legion has launched the Real Poppy Campaign ahead of 2014's centenary of the start of World War One.

It involves distributing packs of poppy seeds in the community to be planted in time for the anniversary of the war.

The campaign has won support from the Prince of Wales and Duchess of Cornwall, and the Prime Minister.

In a statement, the Greenhithe Legion said: "If these seeds were planted in 2014, with a little basic gardening, by 2018 we truly will have planted our towns and our land red."

MP for Dartford Gareth Johnson added: "This promises to be a very moving tribute to the bravery and sacrifice our national troops made for us nearly 100 years ago, and I hope communities will give their full support to bring this vision to life."

they have needed to help put their lives back on track," she said.

Remembrance services and parades will be held across the county next weekend including the two-minute silence. See next week's edition of KoS for your guide to events.

POLICE

Who heads the field in race to be Police and Crime Commissioner?

There are just two weeks to go until Kent's Police and Crime Commissioner is elected. And the winner in the race for office is far from a forgone conclusion. Kent's political map may be dominated by the Conservative Party, but disillusionment over national government and the very real likelihood of a small turnout means traditional result patterns could be ripped apart. The power is firmly with voters as they prepare to go to the polls. Chief reporter Marijke Cox reflects on who could land the £85,000 job.

Name: Ann Barnes Party: Independent

PERHAPS one of the more high profile candidates and a frontrunner, having previously chaired the Kent Police Authority (KPA) for six years.

Her experience working with the Chief Constable through KPA as well as being deputy chair of the National Association of Police Authorities stands her in good stead.

However, the big question is does the wider public know who she is? The chances are in the privacy of the polling booth, those whose name appears alongside a major recognised party could be the ones who benefit the most.

Name: Dai Liyanage Party: Independent

AN independent, he has a strong political background, as former Lib Dem Mayor of Medway and a Lib Dem councillor for Kent County Council, Medway Council and Gillingham Borough Council. He claims to be the "only true independent PCC candidate in Kent and Medway".

Mr Liyanage is a former member of KPA and a police recruitment consultant. His outspoken views, including that the public should become 'have-a-go-heroes', has seen his name in the headlines, and his background as Mayor could see him attract votes in Medway.

But being an independent – and a lesser-known one than Ann Barnes – makes it unlikely he will secure victory.

Name: Craig Mackinlay Party: Conservative

THE most likely candidate to win, he is not only a Tory in a traditionally blue county, but he boasts a résumé that stands him in good stead too.

A magistrate and chartered accountant, Mr Mackinlay is also a Medway councillor and former member of KPA.

He may be hot favourite, but even the Tories are no longer safe in Kent. A sensational win by Ukip in local elections in Tunbridge Wells in May has hinted that disillusioned Conservatives are looking at other options.

Name: Steve Uncles Party: English Democrats REPRESENTING the far-right, he is something of a rank outsider in these elections. Unlikely to attract disillusioned moderate Tories – who will feel more comfortable with Ukip – he also comes up short with his experience of policing. His biography lists Neighbourhood Watch co-ordinator and a community police liaison gold Duke of Edinburgh award among his police experience.

However, with a small turnout, traditionally minority parties can look to make gains.

Name: Piers Wauchope Party: Ukip

A STRONG contender for Tory votes, he has already shown his worth when he stripped the popular Tory leader of true blue Tunbridge Wells Borough Council of his seat in May's local elections.

He has 27 years' experience as a criminal barrister. He also served as a Tory London borough councillor in Camden. Do not under estimate his chances here – he could easily spring a real surprise.

Name: Harriet Yeo Party: Labour

LABOUR has traditionally struggled in Kent to get a cross-county following. It has pockets of support, but even at the height of Tony Blair's popularity the county did not turn its back on its blue roots. To win this will be a tough task.

With no Lib Dem candidate, those left of centre are likely to plump for her, but its difficult to see her picking up sufficient second choice votes should they come into play.

An Ashford councillor, she is also chair of the party's National Executive Committee. While victory is perhaps unlikely, it will provide a strong signal if Labour's much-touted revival in the county is indeed under way.

■ The election takes place on Thursday, November 15, from 7am-10pm.

Estuary airport plans are 'ill-thought out, ill-conceived and unaffordable'

By Marijke Cox

marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

AN AIRPORT in the Thames Estuary is unnecessary, too costly, in the wrong location, and damaging to the environment.

That's the message from town hall chiefs in Medway to the Government's transport select committee.

The parliamentary group opened its own examination into aviation in September in response to the launch of the independent commission chaired by economist Sir Howard Davies – set up by the Government and unlikely to report its findings before the next General Election in 2015.

Chair of the transport committee, Louise Ellman MP, said the strategy for aviation should not be delayed further and invited the public and interested groups to submit their views.

She said this feedback would help influence the Government during the policy development process with "sensible but challenging recommendations".

In response, Medway Council, sup-

TURBULENCE: Medway Council has submitted its report opposing airport plans ported by Swale Borough Council, submitted a report explaining its opposition to a Thames Estuary airport, with evidence supporting its views.

Drawn up by director of regeneration Robin Cooper, the submission outlines better options to the "unviable" estuary airport plan.

"The proposals to build an airport in the estuary are simply not sensible," the council stated.

"To remain competitive globally

we need an airport that can be built in a timeframe that will allow us to remain competitive with our European rivals, that does not have a disastrous environmental impact, that will not require significant taxpayer subsidy, and will attract airlines.

"The proposals to build an estuary airport fail on each and every one of these criteria and are not a viable solution to the UK's future aviation needs."

The report answers a list of questions set out by the transport select committee, including how to make better use of existing airport capacity.

The council said it believed use of spare capacity in existing airports coupled with the development of smaller airports such as Manston and linked in with high-speed rail was a "much better solution" to the future of aviation.

"We believe it is essential the Government's aviation strategy must be based on practicality, affordability and common sense.

"We accept that to remain internationally competitive, the UK needs to increase aviation capacity now.

"Building an airport in the Thames Estuary, however, would be a costly mistake – costly environmentally, costly for west London, and costly for UK plc.

"Plans for an estuary airport have been made to look attractive by a number of well-designed presentations and smart soundbites, but behind the veneer is a proposal that is ill-thought out, ill-conceived and unaffordable."

NO Estuary Airport

What are your views on the proposals? Share your opinion by writing to Airport Campaign, Apple Barn, Hythe Road, Smeeth, Ashford TN25 6SS, or email editorial@kosmedia.co.uk and put 'airport' in the subject line. Sign the petition at www.stopestuaryairport.co.uk

There are currently a number of options being considered; expansion at Heathrow or Gatwick; linking up existing airports; or closing Heathrow and opening a hub airport in the Thames Estuary.

Architect Lord Foster has unveiled plans for a multi-billion pound airport on Grain, London Mayor Boris Johnson is championing a floating airport off the north Kent coast, and architects Gensler have revealed designs for 'London Britannia Airport' in the estuary, which would involve four runways tethered to the seabed.

■ This week Lord Heseltine called on David Cameron to decide within the year where to build new runways.

The Tory peer and former deputy prime minister of the Conservatives, said Mr Cameron needed to speed up the search for new airport capacity or risk the country's economic recovery.

Passengers facing years of disruption for station upgrade

By Chris Murphy

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

LONG-suffering commuters are bracing themselves for years of major rail disruption as works start at London Bridge.

Large sections of the mainline station will be shut as it is developed to cater for the new Thameslink service.

Network Rail has dropped the bombshell on beleaguered travellers, already reeling from massive annual price hikes in the cost of season tickets.

The station is getting new platforms and Britain's largest concourse. There will also be new lifts, escalators and entrances in Tooley Street and St Thomas Street.

The five-year nightmare starts in May, and will hit Southeastern's Kent passengers.

Around 55 million people annually pass through the country's oldest station, but that number is set to soar by 50 per cent once works are finished.

The £6 billion project upgrades seven miles of track and

ALL CHANGE: Rail operators say the work at London Bridge will be worth all the disruption signalling, and sees the rebuilding of several bridges.

Southeastern said: "This project will mean more trains and better journeys."

But in the meantime, it will be passengers who will suffer.

David Sidebottom, passenger director at Passenger Focus, said: "This investment and redevelopment is absolutely necessary. Most passengers should benefit from the improved station and increased capacity."

"However, communication is key. It is essential that staff are on hand to tell passengers what is going on and what the route options are."

Network Rail said platforms 14, 15 and 16, will close when the work starts and in 2014, Thameslink trains will be diverted. Southeastern trains to Charing Cross will not call at London Bridge for a year from 2015, and services to Canon Street will also not halt there during 2016-17.

Highlighting the long-term benefits, Network Rail said the result will be more access, reduced congestion, and an increase in the number of trains stopping at the station increasing from 70 to 88 a day.

Robin Gisby, managing director of network operations at Network Rail, said: "This will be the most ambitious redevelopment of any London station in a generation and one of the most technically demanding projects ever undertaken on our railway."

"Ultimately its success will be defined by the passengers who use the station. The benefits will be massive, but we need their help and support to make it happen."

Planned bridge work this weekend called off

A PLANNED lane closure on the old Rochester Bridge, due to take place this weekend, has been cancelled.

Engineers had planned for the works, but crews were able to complete the essential repair works last weekend.

The works included unblocking drains, checking bridge arches, repairing a parapet hit by a vehicle and other minor repair works.

Motorists warned to expect weeks of delays as critical work begins on water main

By Chris Britcher

chris.britcher@archant.co.uk

WORK on upgrading an old water main in the centre of Faversham begins on Monday, with motorists being warned of six weeks of delays and diversions.

South East Water is spending £41,000 on replacing a section of pipe in West Street. It says the work is essential to protect drinking water supplies for thousands of customers in the town, and make the piping in the area less prone to bursts.

James Smith, delivery manager for the water firm, said: "With an increasing number of bursts this water main is coming to the end of its working life and it's essential we act now to ensure our customers' water supplies are protected.

"When a burst occurs it not only causes interruptions to our customers' drinking water supplies, but also causes localised flooding and disruption to traffic while we carry out emergency repairs."

A section of the road will be temporarily closed to through traffic for the duration of the work.

Pedestrian, resident and business access will be maintained at all times.

A diversion will be clearly signposted.

Work will take place between the junctions of Tanners Street and Caslocke Street.

GO WITH THE FLOW: Work will take six weeks

Mr Smith added: "I know this work may cause disruption to residents and motorists, however, I would like to reassure the local community that we will do all we can to complete the work as quickly as possible.

"I would also like to take this opportunity to thank local residents, businesses and motorists in advance for their patience and cooperation while this important work takes place."

EVENT

Catwalk leaves Wedding Show visitors purring

By Nick Ames

nick.ames@archant.co.uk

SPECTACULAR catwalk displays were among the highlights of The Wedding Show which took place at the Dover Cruise Terminal.

Organised by Archant KOS Media, the event last Sunday attracted hundreds of brides and grooms looking for inspiration for their big day.

Exhibitors included cake makers, photographers, jewellers, dress and menswear retailers and designers, while a Champagne bar provided another attraction.

Musicians performed in the café area of the venue.

The catwalk show featured outfits for brides, grooms and bridesmaids, with models showcasing the wedding wear to the accompaniment of a wide range of popular and classical music – including Adele's theme song to the latest James Bond film, Skyfall.

Its climax was an all-singing and all-dancing routine featuring the entire cast of models, performing the Ben E King classic Stand By Me.

Outside the venue was an unusual way of getting to the wedding itself, a red London double-decker bus, along with stretch limousines for the hen night.

Elli Antoniou, of bridal gown and wedding specialist Teokath of London, was one of the exhibitors.

"The fashion show was great – a real highlight and it showed off some marvellous creations," she said.

"The models were amazing. I went backstage and the atmosphere was great there as well as on stage.

"It was a bit chaotic, but you expect that. There was a lot of banter flying about among the models, they were all having a great time and it really showed when they took to the stage."

Karina O'Donnell, from bridal gown company Pumpkins and Dragonflies, said the event was a great chance for those who work in the wedding business to meet brides.

"You get the opportunity to talk to them and give them help when it comes to their forthcoming wedding," she said.

"You can inspire them with ideas and make sure they get the very best treatment and chose the dress that they know is the right one for them."

Another exhibitor was Wedding Easels – the UK's only company offering bespoke hand-crafted wooden easels to display details such as table plans on the wedding day.

"This is a great opportunity to showcase our unique product," said David Martin.

Visitor Diane Forrester, from Folkestone, said: "It is really great to see all the variety of stands.

"I'm helping to plan a friend's wedding and I've now got loads of ideas I just never would have thought of if I hadn't come along."

STUNNING: Wedding dress designed by Teokath was part of the catwalk show

"From the first viewing to the day I moved in, everything was taken care of."

COMMUNITY

Radio station marks sixth anniversary with events to celebrate and remember

By Chris Britcher

chris.britcher@archant.co.uk

A COMMUNITY radio station saw smiles mixed with tears this week as it celebrated its sixth anniversary – and remembered two of its popular hosts.

BRFM first hit the airwaves on October 30, 2006, delivering a diet of chat and music from its studio in Oak Lane, Minster.

Staffed by volunteers, it relies on the generosity of the community to survive.

But it was dealt a huge blow earlier this year when two of its most popular presenters passed away within a month of one another.

Matthew Judd, production co-ordinator, explains: "Dan Bransby and Sam Hughes were at the radio station for many years and have been sorely missed by their colleagues.

LISTEN IN: BRFM has secured its second community licence, but the year started on a sad note with the deaths of two popular presenters

"Several events have been organised at BRFM to remember them both."

Mr Bransby was just 59 and had been fighting bowel cancer.

But despite the sad news, the radio station has now secured its second community licence and held a special celebration this week to thank all the dedicated staff who have contributed to its success.

Mr Judd added: "It's great to be celebrating another year of BRFM, and we all want to say thanks to our listeners who tune in each day and have supported us over the past six years."

Among its regular programming is the monthly advice surgery hosted by Sittingbourne and Sheppey MP Gordon Henderson.

BRFM is found at 95.6FM.

Trio in 'Bootgate' saga meet at Brands Hatch after online 'manhunt'

By Dean Kilpatrick

dean.kilpatrick@archant.co.uk

THE three main protagonists in what motorsport fans dubbed 'Bootgate' were all smiles when they finally met at the scene of the drama this week.

The saga was sparked when Sheppey race ace Shane 'Shakey' Byrne celebrated winning his third British Superbike crown by hurling a shoe into his adoring fans, as he soaked up the cheers on the winner's podium.

TV footage appeared to show a scuffle which ended with a man walking away with the boot, while a boy was left apparently in tears.

'Bootgate' was born. A campaign emerged on the internet via the likes of Facebook and Twitter. It claimed the man had barged the boy and snatched the boot, and sought to name and shame him.

However, when the man got in touch with this newspaper, calling himself only Ashley, he protested his innocence, and said the situation had got so bad he was receiving death threats and was afraid to leave his house.

Then the father of the young boy, 10-year-old Taylor Rose, contacted us to say his boy hadn't been barged and that no-one was to blame.

And this week, after we put them all in touch with one-another, they met at Brands for a special lap around the track with Shane Byrne at the controls.

The racer said: "After the final race it seemed to be a bit of a pickle. I saw on Twitter that an alleged incident happened, but the priority for me was always to track down the young boy and turn it around.

"As it turns out it was blown out of proportion and poor Ashley was wrongly accused but it has been great to meet both Taylor and Ashley and for us all to have a good day at Brands Hatch.

"We all feel that 'Bootgate' is boxed off now. We had a wonderful crowd of fans at the final round and I feel happy that we have been able to have a happy ending."

Ashley, who did not want to reveal his surname, said: "The first I heard about the pictures on Twitter and Facebook was when a friend saw it online.

"I would never have taken the boot from a child, so it has been good for us to all meet. Together we have had a good day with Shakey and we can now put it behind us."

Taylor's father Jason added: "I was ecstatic with the day; it was absolutely fantastic for Taylor and my family.

"I want to thank Shane, the British Superbike Championship and Brands Hatch for the support they have given my son. He is absolutely beaming after his experience.

"It was also good to meet Ashley; I have never blamed him for what happened. We have all been able to make Taylor's day and that was fantastic."

An excited Taylor said: "I had really good fun. Shakey is my favourite rider so this was really cool. I can't wait to tell my friends."

ARMED FORCES

After more than 30 years on the high seas, Navy's longest serving woman steps down

THE longest serving woman in the history of the Royal Navy has officially retired from active service after 34 years.

Warrant Officer First Class Susan Morgan MBE, from East Malling, joined the Wrens in 1978, serving on five overseas postings and three ships as a Royal Navy Police Officer.

Now retiring at 52, WO1 Morgan's last appointment was lead mediator and investigator for equality and inclusion issues at the Royal Navy Command Headquarters in Portsmouth.

This was pioneering work for the branch and saw her awarded the MBE in 2010.

She joined the Royal Navy at the earliest opportunity – at age 17 years and three quarters – the idea then being that recruits had to be 18-years-old upon completing their basic training.

"I have had the most incredible career working with inspiring and amazing people," she said.

"With a vocation of joining the police, establishing a career which included travelling the world was a dream come true.

RETIRING: WO1 Susan Morgan joined the Royal Navy 34 years ago, when she was aged just 17

"Naturally, in some ways I will be sad to leave, however I have been preparing for life outside for the last two years, receiving advice and bespoke resettlement courses, so I'm now looking forward to new challenges and the next chapter of running my own business."

Problem estate gets its liberty back as hard-line measures drive out the unruly

By Chris Britcher

chris.britcher@archant.co.uk

SINCE the last brick was put into place, the Liberty Park estate in Wainscott has experienced something of a baptism of fire.

A minority of those living on the estate decided that rather than respect thy neighbour, they would instead indulge in antisocial behaviour.

And, as so often happens, once it begins it is easy to snowball.

Before long, the estate was making headlines for all the wrong reasons, with residents saying it was no longer safe to go outside and complaining about gangs of roaming youngsters.

It caught many by surprise. The estate is much like any other which seems to lurk in towns across Kent – a blend of family homes and social housing, with price tags ranging from £160,000 to £260,000.

But the idyllic life advertised on the sales brochures were being threatened by the trouble-makers.

Yet, within the space of just a few months, an impressive effort by a range of community groups have finally seen it turn its fortunes around.

It may not be quite perfect just yet, but in terms of where it was just this summer there is much reason to be optimistic.

The key players in tackling the issues were the local police, council, developers and the housing association which handled the social housing on the estate.

And an essential step was the introduction of a dispersal order.

That allowed police to break up any gathering of two or more known troublemakers, banning them from returning within 24-hours.

The ban, which came into force at the beginning of June, ended at the end of August.

Despite some vocal concerns the issues remain, in recent weeks a calm has descended.

ISSUES: Liberty Park was hit by troublemakers

A spokesman for West Kent Housing Association said: "We and our partners have been working hard to prevent further incidents.

"Since the dispersal zone there has been a significant reduction in reported cases of antisocial behaviour on the estate and in the last few weeks, no reported cases."

Medway Council worked with the police through the Community Safety Partnership, attending daily meetings to discuss issues that require quick responses.

A council spokesman explained: "It was here that joint monitoring and actions were agreed. This led to the installation of two temporary CCTV cameras in positions identified by the partnership."

The spokesman for West Kent Housing added: "The result is residents are now saying they feel it is a much better place to live."

Police agree the dispersal order was a dramatic, but necessary step to take.

A spokesman said: "Since one of the people responsible for a significant amount of antisocial behaviour was re-housed, there has been a dramatic reduction in the number of incidents.

"In the four-month period between February

EASING THE SITUATION

- Regular meetings between police and housing groups and local residents
- Community litter picks
- Fun days during school summer holidays
- Neighbourhood Watch groups established
- Games area set up
- CCTV put in place
- Troublemakers identified and directly approached
- Regular youth sessions and events
- Warnings and legal action for those breaking tenancy agreements and May 2012, there had been 106 calls about antisocial behaviour at the Liberty Park estate.

"That is why Kent Police and Medway Council agreed to implement the short-term measure of a dispersal area. During the time the dispersal area was active, there were just 22 calls."

Although it is no longer a dedicated dispersal area, police say they are continuing to work to keep the situation under control. There continues to be a dedicated police team for Liberty Park and work is under way with partners to engage with the young people on the estate.

Another initiative saw Frindsbury Parish Council secure £45,000 funding to enable it to create a play area on the site, with money coming from Olympic legacy funding and a chunk from housing developer Crest Nicholson.

A public meeting is now scheduled to take place early this month to update residents and to ensure problems that still exist are tackled.

Genette Pinwill, head of housing at the housing association added: "It's starting to feel that we have really turned a corner on Liberty Park.

"We are seeing more positive feedback and more engagement from all residents."

CRIME

Manager used school bank account to pay Merc deposit

A SCHOOL manager who used her employer's bank account for the deposit on a Mercedes-Benz car and to pay off her husband's credit card bills has been jailed for three years.

Sandra Ross, 64, of Stone Croft in Meopham, appeared at Maidstone Crown Court after previously pleading guilty to 23 counts of fraud following a joint investigation between Kent Police and Medway Council into the misappropriation of funds at Temple Mill Primary School.

Ross, who was business manager at the school in Cliffe Road, Strood, was arrested on March 9, 2011, following a number of unauthorised payments from the school's account, totalling £212,166.

The fraud was discovered after Medway Council carried out an internal audit of the school's bank account, which identified a number of unusual payments.

Ross, who had access to Temple Hill's debit card and made the majority of the school's purchases, had been using its bank account for her own ends as far back as 2005.

When she was questioned by the police, Ross admitted to using the school bank account to fund her mother's care home bill. She has paid back £41,656.27 to the school – leaving £170,509.73 unaccounted for.

Police found that Ross was unable to provide documentation for a number of unauthorised transactions made from the school's account, which included a deposit for a new Mercedes-Benz, a laptop, clothing, and furniture. There was also a payment made to her husband's credit card as well as payments for personal decorating services, stone masonry, a skip hire company, and payments to Bupa and Age Concern for family members.

Ross, who has been sacked by the school, was amending data on the monthly documents to the council to hide what she was doing.

Det Con Kim Jordan, said: "This investigation was long and protracted due to the multiple transactions that were under investigation and the time period during which these offences were committed.

"Ross was in a position of trust, which she totally disregarded for her own personal financial gain.

"She deprived Temple Mill Primary School and its pupils of much-needed funds and every effort will now be made to reclaim the outstanding money. I hope the verdict acts as a deterrent for others."

Dartford Crossing motorists to face hefty fines under proposals for new free-flow toll system

By Marijke Cox

marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

DRIVERS using the Dartford Crossing could be fined more than £100 if they fail to pay the free-flow toll charge once introduced in 2014.

The Highways Agency has launched two public consultations; one setting out how the charges will operate and the other how they will be enforced.

The free-flow system will allow motorists to travel through the crossing without having to stop at barriers and hand over payment.

Currently, the stop-start system creates a bottleneck and the road network has become a congestion hot spot costing the economy £40m every year through disrupted business.

Under the new system, which would use camera technology, drivers will be able to pre-pay the fee – currently £2, but due to increase to £2.50 in 2014 – or pay afterwards.

Plans out for public consultation propose a hefty fine for drivers who fail to pay the fee.

A Highways Agency spokesman said road users would be encouraged to pay the charge in advance of using the crossing, and for those who didn't, they would have to pay by midnight that same day.

Under the proposals, those who failed to do so would pay the standard charge plus 20 per cent on the following day.

BLACKWALL FEE PLAN TO PAY FOR NEW £600M TUNNEL

A HIGH PRICE:
Dartford Crossing

MOTORISTS using the Blackwall Tunnel in south-east London could face a £2 charge under proposals set out by Transport for London to fund a new road tunnel under the Thames. The popular route for Kent commuters, keen to avoid congestion around the Dartford tolls, could see charges introduced from 2021, to help foot a £600 million tunnel at Silvertown – linking the docks with the Greenwich peninsula – and a £150m vehicle ferry at Gallions Reach.

After this, the planned penalty charge for non-payment would be £70, with a reduced rate of £35 if paid within 14 days.

If the penalty was not paid within 28 days this would increase to £105.

The Highways Agency is seeking public views on the plans.

Senior project manager Nigel Gray said: "The Dartford Crossing is a crucial piece of national infrastructure that brings economic benefits to the region and the whole country."

"We understand how frustrated motorists are and that is why tackling congestion here is an absolute priority."

Last month motorists saw charges at the crossing rise from £1.50 to £2 for a car, from £2 to £2.50 for lorries and £3.70 to £5 for heavy goods vehicles.

A further increase will be implemented in two years.

The Government says the controversial increases will help pay for free-flowing tolls, due to be put in place in October 2014.

When the first tunnel was built in 1969, the then-Labour government promised to scrap tolls when enough money had been raised to pay off the costs, which was thought to be in 2003.

But this has failed to be implemented under any government since.

MP for Dartford, Gareth Johnson, welcomed the future introduction of free-flowing tolls, but vowed to continue to fight to get the tolls scrapped in their entirety.

Roads Minister Stephen Hammond said removing the barriers would improve traffic flow for all motorists and cut congestion.

"That means the way payment is collected will change," he said.

"We need to make sure we have steps in place to allow enforcement against drivers who do not pay their road user charge."

"How and what will happen needs to be decided and that is exactly what the Enforcement Regulations consultation will do."

Discounts will remain in place for those who set up an account and pay in advance and for those that qualify for the local residents' discount scheme.

The consultation is being launched on Monday and the public will have until January 28 to make comments.

KENT REMEMBERED

Discover the hidden stories behind the old Kentish place names

By Chris Murphy

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

MANY people believe the town of Gravesend is so named because that's where the graves ended during the great plague that killed thousands of people in London.

But the disease struck in 1665, and the town's name was around for about half a century before that.

So no-one is exactly sure how the name came about, and that's the case with many towns in Kent.

However, a team of experts on the subject are set to give a talk this weekend on the origins of some of the county's more unusual place names.

The one-day conference will be held at the Rochester Information Centre, High Street, Rochester, on Saturday, November 3, from 10.30am.

Speaker Paul Cullen of the Bristol Centre for Linguistics at the University of the West of England, knows a thing or two about the movement of place names.

His talk, called Locative Surnames On The Move: When Kentish Names Leave Kent And When Newcomers Arrive, will describe how some town names, such as Maidstone and Canterbury, moved around the country to become surnames.

And Richard Jones, of the Centre for English Local History at the University of Leicester, gives a talk on The Case For Northminster And Other Than-et Mythologies.

Liz Finn, from the Kent History and Library Centre, will discuss The Canterbury Cartae Antiquae Project: A Major Source Of Names.

Mr Cullen will then give the concluding talk of the day, Place-names And Boundaries, from Goudhurst to North Woolwich, before taking questions.

Mr Cullen said: "People are fascinated by place names and where they came from.

"The names of most of the towns and villages of Kent were coined in the early Anglo-Saxon period, in the Old English language before French influence. We rely on the evidence of medieval spellings in order to interpret them. Some are more straightforward than others.

"Sevenoaks, recorded as Seouenaca in the 12th century, simply means 'seven oak-trees'

WHAT'S IN A NAME? Paul Cullen, left, will speak on the history of Kentish place names fifth-century arrival of the Anglo Saxons, also survive.

"For instance Dover, recorded as Dubris in the fourth century, means 'the waters', and Reculver, recorded as Regulbium in the fifth century, means 'the great headland'.

"We know from historical records that Canterbury was earlier called Durovernum, which means 'the walled town in the alder swamp'.

"We also have names in which an earlier British name combines with an Old English word, like Dartford, recorded as Darentford in the 11th century, which means 'ford over the river Darent'.

"And Chatham, recorded as Cetham in the 9th century, means 'village in the wood'."

"I have also examined Kentish surnames which have strayed beyond the county.

"For example, why is Canterbury a Dorset surname? What is Maidstone doing in Norfolk? And some relative newcomers into Kent which suggest such characteristically Kentish surnames including Tapsell, Ayerst, Lowdell and Missing, are in fact well disguised intruders from other counties."

The event has been organised by the Kent Archaeological Society, you can visit the website www.kentarchaeology.org.uk to find out more.

OPINION

Reminder of all they sacrificed

Clare Saunders, fundraiser for the Royal British Legion, highlights how the Poppy Appeal helps ex-service personnel and their families

I was at the launch of Kent Poppy Appeal last week, where the theme for the event was 'Service families pin their hopes on you'.

A clever play on words, as we each pin on our poppies in remembrance at this time of year... but, what does it really mean?

By the end of the year the Royal British Legion will have responded to more than 1,600 calls for help from our service men and women in Kent alone.

Around 30 people each week will have decided enough is enough – I need help.

It is the Legion they turn to, and it is money from the Poppy Appeal that helps them to get their lives back on track.

I am in the lucky position to meet with some of our service men and women, and to hear their stories and to share in their success and delight as they rebuild their lives.

But it is often their families who move us the most – because you don't have to have a service background to appreciate their stories – you simply have to understand the love and care families share.

Uniquely, the Legion helps all generations of the Armed Forces community, and their families.

So I was pleased we not only had six veterans, but also some of the wives, a mother, and a son, to help launch the Poppy Appeal in Kent this year.

Every one of the veterans at the launch have received support from the Legion to help change their lives, and without exception each of them will proudly tell you that they could only have done it with the support of their family.

To help mark the start of Kent Poppy Appeal, the six veterans and their families, symbolically 'pinned' large poppies onto the front of County Hall in Maidstone, but it was through their media interviews the true story of the Poppy Appeal was told.

"Sorry, I can't help the tears", said Nicola Seager, mother to young ex-Army man Steven, as she told her side of the story to a radio station.

She talked about discovering Steven passed out on the sofa surrounded by bottles and the fear of not knowing what to do, and how to cope with Steven as he was struggling with post traumatic stress disorder.

It was hard to see Nicola so upset and to hear her traumatic story – but it was great to listen when she talked about how the Legion provided Steven

Service families pin their hopes on you with practical and financial support and gave them so much "love and care".

But what struck me the most was when Nicola said she couldn't thank the Legion enough for giving her son back to her.

She explained: "To have lost Steven when he was out in Iraq on Ops would have been devastating, but it would have been just as bad if we had lost him after he came home."

Nicola Seager stood alongside her son to be presented with one of the first poppies at the Kent Poppy Appeal Launch last week, along with all the other veterans and their family members.

They all looked so proud as the poppies were pinned on.

Families that have shared highs and lows, each with a different story to tell, but united in their message for this year's Poppy Appeal that 'Service families pin their hopes on you'.

KOS COMMENT

Rising parking fees are one of life's certainties

THERE are three things certain in life; death, taxes and parking charges.

And even if you're one of the lucky ones to have seen parking fees stay the same where you live, it's inevitable that a rise is around the corner.

It's easy to see why traders get so fed-up since they are battling not only a recession but competition with out-of-town shopping centres.

But broke councils responsible for maintaining car parks have to find the money somewhere. Do they keep fees low and plug funding gaps by cutting budgets elsewhere? Or do they risk hitting retailers by pushing up charges?

All we can do is to support our high streets, no matter how frustrating these rising charges are.

Kent Show must dazzle

KENT County Show organisers have said the event will go ahead in 2013, despite July's washout which saw the show descend into a muddy mess.

They'll have to pull something really special out of the bag next year to dazzle the crowds and make sure its reputation remains intact.

Expansion not right answer

RJ CHURCH argues we need a new estuary airport (Letters, October 28). Others argue for expansion at Heathrow.

However, the first question to ask is whether we need more air capacity at all.

Those in favour often assume that more air travel is good for the economy, and therefore expanding UK air travel capacity is necessary to meet increasing demand.

But most flights are for leisure, not business, and we currently have a £15 billion tourism deficit. Therefore, we should impose a significant increase in air taxes, which would lead to a big drop in demand, particularly for frivolous trips, such as stag weekends in Eastern Europe.

This would reduce the tourism deficit and see more people spend their money in the UK, thereby creating jobs.

It would also free up capacity for business travel, provide tax revenue and benefit the environment.

There is nothing inevitable about ever-expanding air travel. It is a choice society – and in particular, this government – has to make.

Richard Mountford,
Hildenborough, Tonbridge

Airport's been done to death

THERE have been letters regarding the estuary airport ad nauseam – surely the subject is now done to death.

Correspondents forget that in this situation one man's/women's job gain, is another man's/women's job loss.

The only real winners are big business.

I'm surprised there hasn't been more fuss regarding the increase in pollution and potential destruction of wildlife that'll be caused by a new expanded airport.

Our political leaders pay lip service to saving the world, reducing our carbon footprint, and conserving fastly depleting unsustainable resources, yet their actions prove the opposite.

Sheep farming brings beauty

REGARDING movement of lambs via Ramsgate, what is the huge interest and why are the media so against it?

The BBC reported the livestock died in port, not that the RSPCA put these animals down due to their own mismanagement.

MP Laura Sandys argues against lambs being exported and then announces on Twitter she is hoping to increase export business from Thanet and Kent for business growth.

Sheep and livestock farming bring the beauty of the countryside to Kent and other counties. With no livestock farming there's no pretty countryside, only horses and ragwort along with large arable fields.

So please bring positive news from the livestock industry into your publications to help keep our countryside beautiful.

No place for politics at polls

NOVEMBER 15, the date on which we will have the chance to elect a police commissioner for our county, fast approaches and there are signs Kent Conservatives are beginning to panic.

How else can they explain the calumny that the one candidate who has the experience and expertise to upset their expectations is a closet Liberal Democrat?

Perhaps we should give them the benefit of the doubt and accept their assumptions are based on the fact that Liberal Democrats are supporting her campaign?

But so too are committed Conservatives and, like me, committed Labour people.

That just emphasises her claim to be politically neutral.

And how very important that she is in this election.

Ann Barnes is standing on a platform of keeping party politics out of policing, and of opposing privatisation of any core part of Kent police and further government cuts in the police service.

Conversations I have had with many people make clear their concerns that the intervention of failed or ambitious politicians is both unacceptable and dangerous.

Those who are accountable to a political party are unlikely to put the interests of those they seek to represent as a top priority, especially if the views of those who selected them and to whom they are accountable, are different.

I would not expect the Conservative candidate to agree with my views, but the least he can do is to publicly disassociate himself from the false allegations about Ann Barnes.

Revelation of 'Dumpy' level

I READ with interest your article about the tunnels under Dover Castle and the Dumpy level, until it said that no-one knows why its called 'Dumpy'.

I can enlighten you.

During my time as an officer with Kent Fire Brigade, we frequently went up to the tunnels on familiarisation visits and were aware of the secret use of 'Dumpy' level as a regional seat of government in the event of a nuclear attack.

There are at least four levels to these tunnels and at some stage these levels were designated alphabetically: A, B, C, and D. They were then given a name that corresponded to these letters: A – Annexe, B – Bastion, C – Casemates and D v Dumpy, with Dumpy being the lowest of the four levels.

I am not sure about the origins of the first three, but 'Dumpy' was indeed an acronym. It stood for Deep Underground Military Position-Yellow, which referred to its military use.

Bob Greenfield, River

Tory's views are just Gaga

CLLR Chris Wells (Letters, October 21), a warrior 'defending' marriage from being picked by all those who love each other, cites Tory views as if asking a Tory about gay rights is in any way different from asking a caveman about the latest Lady Gaga song.

Apparently striving for equality is a "trendy metropolitan" thing and tradition is a good excuse for oppression.

If members have been lost from political groups because they believe some people are simply born inferior and should just 'stop it', then why should these people be mourned?

I agree though that equal marriage should not be a pressing issue. It should just be passed without consultation or argument, because fair is fair and equal is equal.

I pay just as much tax as my heterosexual neighbour and play just as important a role.

So why should I not be afforded equal treatment?

Your business is our business

It's time to grow a firmer interest in rural ventures

By Nick Ames

nick.ames@archant.co.uk

RETAILERS should help research development into new food producing techniques, according to the man at the helm of a new bid to promote Kent's countryside industries.

Mike Bax, who is also High Sheriff of the county is heading up Rural PLC (Kent) – with the aim of maximising the impact of the rural sector – which was a company would be ranked 57th in the FTSE 100 with assets of £5.4 billion.

The formation of the new body is an innovative move to attract investment into all aspects of rural business, such as agriculture and horticulture.

Bax, chairman of the group, said: "The big anomaly is that the rural sector only gives a return on investment of around two per cent. This is compared to a return on capital of some 10 per cent for retailers. Even a small business in that sector will generate between five and 10 million pounds annually – much more than most farming businesses.

"So we have to work to create more profitability, which means investing in research and development.

"One of our objectives is to get financial commitment from those who make profits from rural produce to plough some money back into farming.

"Areas which could be approached include improving varieties of soft fruit so that they store well, smell good and taste better.

"Water is a very important issue – ways could be found to move it around between farms, so there is always an adequate supply. Storage techniques could also be improved to increase the shelf life of a product.

"It is in retailers' own interests to invest in the rural sector, as it would obviously increase the standard of the products which they are selling."

Bax said Rural PLC (Kent) was also looking to attract younger people into the industry.

"I understand the average age of a farmer in Britain is 58 – well if that is the case it is time they moved over to make way for younger people. We need to encourage the next generation," he said. "We have to make people aware that farming is a worthwhile career. There is a perception that if you work in the rural sector you need to get your hands dirty but that is not necessarily so. Marketing, management, research and development are all very important aspects of the business."

The move to bring Kent's farming businesses under one banner is to enable them to each have a louder voice when it comes to lobbying or appealing for funding.

"It is a groundbreaking approach, but it is very necessary as food is a vital primary resource," said Bax

RURAL VOICE: High Sheriff Mike Bax

Mark Lumsden-Taylor is director of finance and resources at Hadlow College, which adds business acumen to its courses in all aspects of agriculture, farming and horticulture, and is backing the project.

"Our courses link into the Rural PLC by offering vocational and practical training which will enable people to enter into work with the necessary skills and a knowledge of business," he said.

TOURISM

European cash to help encourage visitors from across the Channel

VISIT Kent and Kent County Council have successfully bid for European Union money to help deliver a £2.9 million project to increase awareness of rural tourism businesses on both sides of the Channel.

Running for three years, the drive is intended to identify fresh approaches to marketing and develop new tools, taking advantage of the latest technology, to help businesses diversify and communities to work together.

The project, called Cool Tourism, will also include detailed research into the economic impact of tourism in Kent's rural areas and identify barriers to growth.

Visit Kent and KCC joined forces with other UK and French partners to bid for the cash.

Sandra Matthews-Marsh, chief executive at Visit Kent, said: "This is a key project which will really help grow tourism and the Kent rural economy.

"The partnership project, which runs until 2015, will examine in detail the common difficulties rural tourism faces in taking its product to market. It will develop the best solutions to encourage growth and diversification to maintain and sustain the biodiversity and heritage in each of the areas.

COOL TOURISM: Visit Kent's Sandra Matthews-Marsh

"It will help create new networks bringing businesses and communities together and lead to specific, accessible business tools to deliver tangible results."

KCC say the cash will boost the county's tourism earnings potential.

Mark Dance, KCC cabinet member for regeneration and economic development, said: "We are delighted to have worked with Visit Kent to drive forward this bid for Interreg European funding. It will enable us to tackle some of the underlying issues our many rural tourism businesses and communities face.

"Kent, with two Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty, has stunning countryside and so many villages and hamlets to explore.

"There are great opportunities for visitors throughout the year. Kent is a perfect destination for everyone whether they are seeking total rest and relaxation, looking for healthy activities such as walking, cycling and horse riding, exploring our hidden treasures or learning new skills on the growing number of bushcraft, and arts and crafts opportunities.

"Working in partnership with our existing rural networks as well as with other areas tackling similar issues will benefit us all."

Basepoint to help more businesses with discount

BASEPOINT Business Centres is pledging support to start-ups and SMEs in an attempt to help sustain economic growth, with a special discount offer.

Budding entrepreneurs and local SMEs have from now until Wednesday, December 12, to sign up and claim a 12 per cent discount on all license fees and services at any centres in Canterbury, Dartford, Chatham, Northfleet and Folkestone, which will last for 12 months.

Brian Andrews, Basepoint's executive director, said: "Our ethos at Basepoint remains in supporting start-ups and giving them some of the advantages that larger businesses enjoy.

"As part of our annual promotion, we want to make it even more affordable for SMEs to grow with a special autumn/winter incentive offering a further 12 per cent off all our license fees and services. We continue to offer our original 'easy in, easy out' license agreements, which means start-ups don't have to worry about long term rental or lease arrangements."

Recently, Basepoint Dartford held an event in celebration of its achievements during its first year of operation attended by 160 people.

These included: Brian Andrews, executive director of Basepoint Centres; Cllr Ann Allen, Mayor of Dartford; and representative of grant making body The ACT Foundation, Derek Joseph.

Allison Sweeney, centre manager, said: "In the first month we welcomed 27 businesses.

"We now have more than 70 businesses on site with just a few offices remaining, which just goes to show that businesses in Kent are thriving.

"We enjoyed a party with hog roast, candy floss, and cloudy lemonade.

"It was a wonderful day and we would like to say thank you to everyone who has supported us over the past year and we look forward to welcoming new businesses to the centre in the future."

County needs to make the most of new opportunities as recession is finally over

By Nick Ames

nick.ames@archant.co.uk

THE end of the double-dip recession has been mirrored by the latest survey into how Kent companies are faring.

And the news is that business confidence is on the up says The Federation of Small Businesses.

Over the third quarter Britain's gross domestic product – which measures the value of everything produced in the country – grew by one percent.

This figure was made up of increases in the production sector by 1.1 per cent and service industries by 1.3 per cent. However construction fell 2.5 per cent.

Officially the GDP of the UK fell by 6.3 per cent in 2009 – its lowest ebb since the recession started in 2008. It has now regained around half that all-time recent low.

The county's business community say the figures from the Office of National Statistics are reflected by the results of the FSB Kent Small Business Autumn 2012 Barometer in which 44 per cent of respondents had increased their sales when compared to the previous year.

Almost one in three small firms in Kent reported increased profits and more than one in five had taken on more staff; helping to relieve unemployment in the county.

Nationally, the Olympic Games made a small contribution to the upturn in figures – leading some analysts to say the increase in productivity may not be sustainable. But Kent figures say the event had no effect on 80 per cent of small businesses in the county, only 2.5 per cent gained sales while the Olympics had a detrimental effect on 17.5 per cent of small firms.

Roger House, FSB chairman in Kent and Medway, said: "The economy is going in the right direction, with our FSB Barometer results indicating almost one in four (38 per cent) small businesses forecast better prospects in 2013.

"There is still a long way to go – growth has flatlined in the last year, so Chancellor George Osborne must use the autumn statement to sustain recovery. Small firms want to grow and if this is to happen they need confidence in the economy.

"The Government is moving in the right direction by announcing the small business bank, but we believe that also extending the National Insurance Contributions holiday to all micro firms across the UK would add £1.3 billion to GDP helping to entrench growth."

The economy had been in recession for the previous nine months and has still not recovered the levels of output seen before the financial crisis in 2008.

The GDP figures were also enhanced by comparison with the previous three months, because the second quarter had an extra public holiday as part of the Diamond Jubilee celebrations, as well as unusually bad weather, which reduced growth.

Dan Wagner, CEO of finance firm mPowa, said, "On the coalface, conditions are still fragile. There is still a reluctance to invest in startups and as a result, we could still see a long road to full recovery.

"What the business community wants to see is a package of incentives to stimulate growth and create jobs. This is what the economy needs to bring about lasting change now the Olympic panacea is behind us."

Chancellor of the Exchequer Osborne said: "There is still a long way to go, but these figures show we are on the right track."

FOR ALL: Steve Carpenter says both employer and employee will benefit from the scheme

MONEY

Paying a staff bonus could be a benefit for all

DSH Chartered Accountants & Business Advisors has come up with a scheme which it says will allow business owners and managers to reward staff and save tax and National Insurance at the same time.

Its Staff Suggestion Scheme allows businesses to reward their employees financially for making suggestions to improve the business and these payments are exempt from tax or National Insurance. The business also qualifies for tax relief on any payments.

Under the terms of the scheme, payments of up to £25 can be made to each employee for each "bright idea" they have, and a maximum limit of £5,000 can be paid if the suggestion is implemented and the benefits recorded.

The Staff Suggestion Scheme must be formally set up but approval from HMRC is not needed.

Steve Carpenter at DSH's Maidstone office said: "The beauty of this scheme is that it benefits both the employer and the employee.

"The employer stands to improve its efficiency or effectiveness by acting upon the ideas of those who know the business best – its staff – as well as gaining tax relief on the payments it rewards its workers with, while the employees will receive a cash incentive for helping to drive the business forward.

"In order to qualify for the tax free payment, a suggestion must be outside the scope of the employee's normal duties.

"To implement a formal scheme all the employer needs to do is publicise the details to its staff openly – for example, by posting a simple set of scheme details on the office notice board."

OPTIMISTIC: The FSB's Roger House says things are looking up but there is still a long way to go

The Caravan Club takes over European travel specialists

Under the terms of the sale, Mark Hammerton is set to leave the business following a handover period. Most of the remaining directors and all other staff will continue with company, which will now be known as Alan Rogers Travel Group.

Glen Mallaby of BCMS said: "We are absolutely delighted to have finalised the sale of such a renowned travel specialist as Mark Hammerton Group. Not surprisingly interest in the business was considerable and we are confident that under the ownership of The Caravan Club it will

Training, courses and careers

Meet the students at college's two campus open days

NORTH West Kent College is hosting an Open Day, at its newly redeveloped Dartford and Gravesend campuses.

The event is on Thursday, November 8, from 3.30-8.30pm.

The college says it has an excellent record of providing a pathway to employment and university, and that it offers a range of courses and levels in hair, beauty, business, secretarial, computing, construction, engineering, catering, art and design, music, media, performing arts, professional care, sport, travel and tourism, public services, foundation learning, and higher education.

The college has links with business, which enable students to gain the best experience possible and potentially job opportunities after completing their course.

The Business Career Academy is linked with companies in Canary Wharf, and the sport department has recently teamed-up with Gillingham FC to provide a professional coaching programme.

Principal David Gleed said: "Don't just arrange to come and talk to our staff, arrange to come and talk to our students too and find out why they chose North West Kent College. Our students are our best ambassadors and their success is our greatest achievement."

Some £90 million has been invested in facilities at both campuses. There are entry Level 1 and 2 progression courses available across the college.

UTC could bring back engineering glory days

A UNIVERSITY Technical College for Medway would provide a wealth of opportunities for young people who might otherwise drop out of education.

That is the view of Sue McLeod, acting principal of MidKent College – one of the lead sponsors of the bid to secure a UTC for the towns and help restore Medway's reputation as a hot-bed of engineering and construction talent.

One of its roles in the project is to give support and advice in all stages of the UTC's development and beyond, with the college saying it is well placed to advise on curriculum, premises and the specific equipment required to meet industry standards.

Ms McLeod said: "The unfortunate reality of the existing system is that by the time many students reach school-leaver age they have lost interest in their own education."

"A UTC will enable a degree of specialisation prior to age 16 that is currently unavailable and which will re-engage and enthuse students."

"Young people who choose to study at such a UTC will also be supported in their progression to further and higher education at MidKent College, which offers a wide range of courses in engineering and construction in addition to apprenticeships and advanced apprenticeships."

SPONSOR: Officials at MidKent College believe a University Technical College would bring benefits

The preferred site for the UTC is an unused block at the Royal School of Military Engineering, where MidKent College has a contract, through the Ministry of Defence, to deliver £690 million of training.

Ms McLeod said: "With the Wolf report advising that thousands of vocational subjects be stripped from school league tables, it has never been more important to increase the range of options available to young people.

"A UTC in Medway would open a whole world of possibilities for young people in the region and ensure they are not lost to an educational system that did not properly provide for them."

Funding boost to train minority groups to be decision-makers

GETTING on Board, a project to help people get involved in community decision-making, has won nearly £50,000 of funding to deliver new learning opportunities across Kent.

The programme will be led by Community Futures, part of the Avenues Group and delivered in partnership with members of the Kent Valuing People Partnership, Community Learning and Skills, part of Kent County Council, and Dods/Westminster Explained.

Getting on Board has won £47,561 funding from the Skills Funding Agency as part of the new Community Learning Innovation Fund to teach people about how decisions get made where they live and how to get involved, for example on school boards, NHS patient groups, and community plans.

The courses are aimed at people who may not usually get involved, such as those with learning disabilities, and people from minority groups.

Getting on Board will help people to develop their confidence, build on particular interests such as the environment or other community issues, and will involve speakers from the community.

Community Futures managing director Simon Goldsmith said: "We are delighted to be able to deliver this programme of work across Kent with East Kent Mencap and North West Kent Independent Advocacy Scheme."

"We are looking forward to working with many local people to develop new leaders who will help our communities to be cleaner, safer and welcoming to all.

"We are particularly pleased we will be working with many local decision-makers to hear about the work they do and how ordinary people can make a greater contribution to the places where they live and work."

Tony Shaw, director of development at Dods Training, said: "As an organisation that works with Parliament, government and the civil service on a regular basis, this fantastic project is a great opportunity to work with community groups across Kent."

"We recognise what a crucial initiative this represents in the current climate and hope to play a small part in making a big difference to the lives of those with learning difficulties and from minority groups."

Verity Hancock, Skills Funding Agency executive director, capacity and infrastructure, said: "The response to the new Community Learning Innovation Fund has been phenomenal and the Skills Funding Agency is pleased to be able to support these innovative projects that meet the needs of local people."

"By making it easier for disadvantaged people to learn new skills and access training and support, they gain new opportunities to improve their lives, building stronger families and communities in the process."

Art students produce work for mental health wards

CANTERBURY College students have created therapeutic artwork for newly-opened mental health wards at St Martin's Hospital in the city.

Thirty students created graphic murals and photo prints for the walls, signage, and window art for the £10 million Foxglove and Bluebell wards.

Students worked with the hospital as part of their BTEC Extended Diploma in Graphic Design and Photography coursework. The hospital asked them to help create a suitable environment for people with mental health problems.

The series of images they created evoke serene outdoor spaces.

The hospital's principal art therapist Joyce Armstrong said: "When discussing artwork for the new build, my thoughts went to the college. I introduced the students' artwork to service users and staff who would potentially use the new unit, and took art workshops to the wards where we generated a variety of themes.

"These led to a choice of native wild flowers that produced the names and overall themes for the wards."

The students were given a £25,000 budget for the project. Patients and staff from St Martin's regularly visited the college's art department to give input throughout the design process. Charlie Thompson, 18, from Ashford, designed several wall murals, signage and window graphics for the wards. He said: "It's great to see my work in the wards and know it's going to help people with their recoveries. That makes it even more worthwhile."

Victoria Packman, 18, from Sittingbourne, provided several photographic prints. She said: "We had to be really careful when making the art because patients could find certain things, like blurry images, distressing.

"We had to keep it bright, colourful and happy so they feel peaceful when they see it."

Gold medal for sports department

FOLKESTONE Academy's sports and PE department has been awarded the gold level Sainsbury's School Games Kitemark for its commitment, engagement and delivery of competitive school sport.

To achieve the award the academy had to provide evidence for a number of set criteria, in particular motivating less-active students to take part in regular sporting activities as well as ensuring all students take part in at least two hours of PE during curriculum time each week.

The Gold Kitemark was awarded for additional standards including recognition of coaching programmes and student engagement within community competitions either as performers or volunteers.

Head of sports and PE Louise Eede, said: "This is a fantastic award and all credit goes to the children who participated in sporting clubs and competitions on a regular basis. It's a great honour and I would like to thank all the staff, volunteers and coaches."

Academy pupils build wind turbine as part of Young Engineers project

STUDENTS from Year 9 and 10 at the Marlowe Academy have been given the opportunity to work with the national Young Engineers project.

The executive directors of Young Engineers, Stuart Ellins and Nigel Moore, led a range of activities with the pupils, designed to stimulate the brains of tomorrow's scientists and engineers.

Students at the Ramsgate school worked through a range of practical and theoretical activities which gave them an insight into the energy problems facing the country and the world as the century unfolds.

The highlight of the day was a competition to build a working wind turbine on a limited resource budget, and see who could produce the most electricity.

The winners were Steph Aves, Casey Appleyard, Charlotte Richardson, Kieran Mills, and Jungle Hall.

Students said one of the most interesting insights of the day was understanding the breadth of the world of engineering which encompasses almost every sphere of human activity imaginable.

The academy said a fun-filled day was had by all.

Year 10 student Charlotte Richardson, said: "This has been fun and educational.

"I learned about 'Reducing, Re-using and Recycling' materials and how to create energy from waste products.

"The practical was fun and I'd like to see more activities like this in the academy. The teachers were lovely and helped me learn lots."

THE INTERVIEW

Port Lympne rhinos

A day in the life of a rhino keeper

Joe Bill fulfils a childhood dream that's sadly being rapidly killed off

LAST year 448 rhinos were killed by poachers in South Africa. And according to the Save the Rhino charity, a further 281 had been massacred in the country by July in 2012. It is predicted this number will rise to more than 500 by the end of December.

Such statistics highlight the very real possibility that these beautiful creatures may one day be gone from the wild forever; rhinos could well soon only survive in captivity.

Outside of Africa, Port Lympne Wild Animal Park near Ashford is home to the largest herd of the critically endangered sub species, the eastern black rhino. Years of hard work has seen the park, as part of the Aspinall Foundation, become experts in breeding, having overseen 33 births to date.

It has always been a dream of mine to get up close to these prehistoric looking power houses and having Port Lympne on my doorstep was the perfect excuse to get involved.

The six person rhino team at the park are currently responsible for 14 eastern black rhinos, having recently seen the successful translocation of two females and a male back to the wild in a protected reserve in Tanzania.

My day started at 9am, early for a Saturday, but still more than an hour later than the keepers I was helping/hindering. I found keeper Nick Turk at the bottom of the rhino paddock trying to encourage a large female into a field so that her 'bedroom' could be cleaned. She wasn't budging, instead she happily chowed down on some bushes along the metal fenced walkway.

Nick, who was born to zoo keeper parents, said: "They are browsers, they will eat shrubs and bushes, even nettles as she is doing. They have been in the paddock for the summer so this bush here is a little over grown."

The rhino was doing a good job at trimming back the nettles. The munching noise of her teeth as the leaves were ground up was loud and intense. If you couldn't see her, you would still know the sound came from a big animal.

Nick added: "Sometimes they need some encouragement to get moving."

He then walked behind the rhino before

POWER HOUSES: Protective mum and baby Kissima, right Joe Bill falls in love with the great Kingo jumping over the barrier, clapping, shouting and encouraging the one and a half tonne rhino to move on. Apparently although rhinos are quite an aggressive species, each has their own character, so Nick knew what he was doing.

Next out was the mum and calf pair. Kissima was born in June and introduced to the public in July, an event I was present for. She has grown significantly and is beginning to resemble a little tank.

I ventured towards the metal bars to take a closer look, but mum made her feelings clear by taking a short sprint to the fence and scaring me back a few paces. My place was made very clear by this mother looking out for her calf.

Next out was Kingo, an adult male bull who has fathered a number of calves across Port Lympne and Howlett's in Canterbury. But Nick explained that he was far more docile than the others and enjoys being made a fuss of.

I was handed a feed bag containing carrots, celery, a couple of apples and a banana before being told to "feed him if you want".

My near death experience with the last rhino made me extremely hesitant to even approach the bars, but after Kingo gently took a stick of celery from Nick's hand using his almost beak-like lips, I was up for giving it a go. Keep my fingers out of the way I had fed him only a banana and a carrot before I was hooked, hand feeding him for the next 10 minutes.

Once full, Kingo then came and leaned against the metal posts separating us and Nick began to pat and groom him, even tickling his ears and snout. I took my direction from him and again gave it a go. His hide was rough and muddy, but the skin behind his ears and in the folds of his thighs was soft and after being directed to tickle there, the giant mammal lifted his leg and began to lean.

"Sometimes they will even roll over onto their sides to let you rub them," said Nick.

It was amazing to see this huge beast acting just like a house cat.

Next came the real hard work. I knew I would be having to clean up rhino droppings at some point, and here was that moment. Hoses, brooms, shovels and an anti-bacterial liquid in hand we scrubbed floors and walls, cleaned out drains, shovelling droppings onto a wheelbarrow for the dung heap.

Once those tasks were completed, for the 14 animals – that's a lot of dung – it was time to get the dinners ready for that afternoon and the breakfasts for the following morning.

Most of the rhinos have a diet of fruit and vegetables but the youngsters are given double to help them grow. There are also supplements in some diets, given as nutrient filled pellets.

It wasn't until the afternoon when the sun finally came out that I realised the keepers have another rather big issue to deal with. Visitors.

I had almost forgotten this was a working park until a group of families headed out in trucks on the African Experience safari. It struck me that the keepers often go unnoticed, getting about their important and tiring work without drawing attention to themselves.

Getting as close to these animals as I did is an experience I will never forget, and I thank these 'hidden' keepers who helped me achieve a dream. As the animal parks look to utilise any possible source of much needed income both Port Lympne and Howlett's now offer the same opportunity to youngsters looking to have a similar experience. Look out for the Zoo Keeper Academy aimed at teenagers, as well as Junior Ranger days to engage younger enthusiasts.

The Aspinall Foundation's work is helping to improve and boost the eastern black rhino's situation in South Africa but with a wild population thought to be down to around the 800 mark, our increased attention to these amazing animals cannot come soon enough.

A venue needs more than a chalkboard to avoid the chop

AS Kent's coastal areas continue to impress with their range of restaurants and high level of cuisine excellence, it is inevitable that more eateries will try their hand in the thriving market place.

The Oyster & Chop House in Herne Bay High Street is one of those to pop up in recent months and a number of good things have been said about it. The decor is modern and stylish and features the menu chalked up on a blackboard in what is now a common trend. The dishes available looked impressive on the board and the almost nouvelle cuisine style of presentation was equally mouthwatering.

We were served our first round of drinks along with homemade mini loaves of brown and white bread as well as a mini pork terrine with pickles and vinaigrette appetizer. Very nice, very neat and hopefully a sign of things to come.

Portion sizes are not ever a bugbear of mine usually but having paid £6 for a clam, whelk and red cabbage salad to start, I was shocked to receive just three cooked clams and two whelks on my plate. The shell fish was superb and the dressing on the red salad excellent, but it was gone in one forkful. My guest went for the grilled courgettes, marinated feta and quinoa (a grain like ingredient, similar to cous-cous) at £6. It is fair to say that the diner was not over enamoured with the almost raw vegetables nor the price they came in at.

For the main course I went for the roast partridge with pearl barley and rosehip marinated carrots, £15. The carrots were delicious and the wings of the bird very well cooked, and again the dish was presented beautifully. However, the body of the partridge was very disappointing. Not only was it incredibly difficult to take any of the meat from the bird's body, it was over-cooked and rubbery.

My guest had more luck with the chicken breast and leg steak in a tarragon sauce, £13.50.

After giving it a try myself, the dish was tasty, even if the portion size once again left a little to be desired.

Our service had been decent up to that point, but as the night went on and the tables filled it was clear another member of waiting staff was needed. This was commented on by the table sitting next to us. Despite finishing our first round of drinks half an hour previously, we were not offered a second. A long wait ensued after our main course was finished by which time we had decided against one of only two desserts that seemed to be available.

Instead we opted for a cafe latte, £3, before we left for the evening. Mistake. It did eventually arrive, more than 15 minutes later, with an apology for tardiness but really, the restaurant isn't that big and for a Saturday night, maybe some foresight to bring in an extra pair of hands would have been wise. The restaurant has good ideas but it needs to walk before it can run and get the basics right first.

I would maybe go back, in time, but for now I will let others be the guinea pigs.

Angels and Demons are revealed for all to see as TV crew joins tour

By Joe Bill

joe.bill@archant.co.uk

UNTIL 2004 only two things were associated with the name Peter Andre, mysterious girls and stomach muscles.

In 1996 Andre had bagged 12 top 10 spots with his single Mysterious Girl all over the world, including two number ones. But that was pretty much where the story ended.

Arguably one of the greatest one hit wonders of all time.

But after agreeing to take part in the I'm a Celebrity Get Me Out of Here reality show on ITV in 2004, the performer's whole world changed. Mysterious Girl came back to number one in the UK chart and Andre was a hit once more. His career had gone full circle, and the rest is history.

Now with his new album, Angels and Demons, coming out and a live tour to go with it, Andre has reinvented himself away from his strictly pop past.

"It has been so bizarre, I am so grateful I have had that second chance. Everyone has been so supportive it has been amazing.

"When I went into the jungle I was expecting to just go in for two weeks and then go back overseas and then Chris Moyles started playing Mysterious Girl on the radio. I came out of the show and found the song had been campaigned on Radio One, it was a dream come true."

And although Mysterious Girl will forever be sung at Andre by passing strangers, the 39-year-old is ready to move on and create new music.

"I don't mind that (Mysterious Girl) is still there because it is a great song, it worked all over the world for me. You can go as far as Jamaica or all over Europe and everyone knows that song."

"You have to have some sort of talent to keep going, I write music, I write scripts for other stuff and I do public speaking, endorsements and own coffee shops, I am seriously into what I do."

And his new album is the embodiment of the move away from his pop past.

"We all battle our own angels and demons, you have the good guy and bad guy in all of us. It is saying 'I appreciate the angels and demons fighting each other, but can you both leave me alone. Whatever will be will be'.

"A lot of people will relate to the lyrics of this album. It is all different, there's happy stuff, there's darker stuff. And the music is everything from electronic dance to pop to RnB."

"This is what I want to do. I could go back to the real poppy stuff again but I want to do my own thing and not follow anyone. Funnily enough I don't really listen to pop anymore."

Andre has also starred in a string of reality shows which covered both his life with ex-wife and glamour model Katie Price, as well as his more recent shows that follow his career, entitled My Life.

The third series will be filmed during his Up Close and Personal tour which comes to Margate's Winter Gardens on Monday, November 19.

He said: "We have a great visual show, we have illusions and the whole magic circle thing, it should be amazing."

"There will be things happening throughout the show that will be illusions, so people are constantly entertained to do something a bit different. I don't want to just do song and dance you know? I can't say too much because I want people to come and see it, but it is mind boggling."

Do you rent your home? Then be ready to pay a high price

By Nick Ames

nick.ames@archant.co.uk

A NEW survey claims renters are in for a hard time over the next decade – while homeowners will prosper.

Rents in Kent look set to soar by more than half in the next decade with house prices rising by a huge two thirds, according to the report from the National Housing Federation.

It says “years of not building enough homes” will push rents up 55 per cent by 2022.

In Kent this would mean rents rising from £733 per month to £1,137 per month – an extra £403 every month. Meanwhile, house prices in the South East will increase 61 per cent, the steepest rise nationwide.

The picture is already bleak for Kent renters, says the federation.

Average rents in nine out of 13 Kent local authorities rose faster than incomes in 2012. Across the county, average private rents rose by three per cent while incomes only rose two per cent. Gravesham was hardest hit, with rents rising nine per cent and incomes only two per cent, followed by Swale, where rents rose four per cent but incomes dropped three per cent.

However, average rents fell in Maidstone, Dover and Sevenoaks over the same period.

The report Home Truths 2012 also warns that thousands more families will have to rely on Government support to pay their rent in the next few years.

Despite Government efforts to tackle public debt, the number of working people who rely on housing benefit to pay for private rent has risen 86 per cent across England in the last three years, an increase of more than 400,000 people. This number is only likely to grow with the rises in housing costs forecast in Home Truths 2012 say its compilers.

Warren Finney, South East lead manager for the National Housing Federation, said: “It’s crunch time for our unsustainable housing market, with house prices and rents set to rocket in Kent as thousands of families are already struggling to afford their home. One in 16 families in the South East is currently on the waiting list for social housing and it looks like the situation is going to get far worse.

“Successive governments have failed to tackle the under-supply of housing. Now time is running out to fix the problem, and a whole generation are at risk of being priced out of renting a home, let alone buying one.

“Being unable to afford the homes

HIGH PRICE:

Warren Finney says new homes need to be built urgently to limit a large rise in rental prices they need can stop people from moving for work. It also prevents young couples from starting families, having a huge impact on people’s aspirations and ultimately affecting the economy.

“As our Home Truths report shows, even working families are becoming more and more reliant on housing benefit to help pay their private rent. It’s clear the chronic undersupply of new homes across Kent and England needs to be tackled now, to ease the financial pressure for families and Government.”

The National Housing Federation is calling on the Government and the whole housing industry to take a long-term, joined up approach to tackle the market difficulties. It says the Government must more immediately release publicly-owned brownfield land to housing associations so they can build more houses.

SO often wrong-footed a decade ago by premium rivals, Mercedes-Benz looks like the master of the quickstep at the moment.

This is partly shown by growing UK volumes and market share, but will soon be aided and abetted by a completely new entry model, set to be a major recruiter to the German brand.

It's the all-new A-Class (from £18,945) a radical departure from the previous two generations, which followed a high-profile mini-MPV format.

'Generation 3A' is a rakish, almost coupé-style five-door hatchback using the brand's latest sharp-edged design language.

And it makes huge sense. The previous A-Class overlapped the only slightly bigger B-Class, so you had the nonsensical situation of two smallish MPVs competing for similar customers.

What were arch-rivals Audi and BMW doing, and perhaps VW too, with its big-selling Golf? Selling loads to image-conscious, keen driving private buyers, small business types and young company car user choosers.

But M-B has turned the tables. The A-Class looks good too against its obvious rivals; Audi's obsession with evolution rather than revolution makes the latest A3 look suspiciously like its predecessors.

And talking of looks, the MkII BMW 1 Series is hardly an advance on the awkward first generation car, even if it's a joy to drive.

Coming up on the blind side, but perhaps without the stamina for a strong finish there's also the Lexus CT200h. It's unique in the market place as a compact executive petrol-electric hybrid, but the jury is still out on whether this powertrain beats an eco-friendly diesel. Its looks are also a matter of taste.

Meanwhile, A-Class looks sharp and Mercedes seems determined to give it even more of an edge via some tempting deals. With Personal Contract Purchase (PCP) schemes now making up the bulk of finance on new cars, the A-Class is available from just £249/month, with similar deals for business users.

This works out at a 36-month fixed-term finance offer, based on a £3,279.50 deposit and 4.9 per cent APR.

The opposition will be worried because even as Mercedes has waited for its new most affordable model to arrive, the marque has been posting record market share figures: 4.6 per cent up in the new '62 new reg month of September and currently running at 12.8 per cent ahead of 2011 stats.

This has also seen the C-Class saloon, coupé and estate line-up leap into the UK top 10 sellers list just behind arch-rival, the BMW 3 Series.

Rather than damaging BMW and Audi and other rock solid premium brands though, it underlines the fact private and company car buyers are tending to play safe during shaky economic times, by buying vehicles that hold their value when sold onto the second-hand market.

All-new Mercedes A-Class starts off on the right footing

GERMANIC GENIUS: Mercedes has turned the tables on its rivals with the creation of its all-new A-Class, a coupé-style hatchback that comes with some tempting personal finance deals

/// DON'T LIKE ///

...how long it took M-B to stop peddling two competing MPV-type cars – the old A-Class and the B-Class – before producing this newcomer.

/// NOT SURE ///

...M-B yet has the younger age profile of arch-rivals BMW and Audi, but this smart new A-Class should quickly break down those prejudices.

/// REALLY LIKE ///

...how the giant German brand has admitted "we got it wrong" and hit back with a smart-suited design to match the ambition of would-be drivers.

New CX-5 bold first flight for Mazda's SkyActiv technology

By Steve Loader

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

THERE'S lots of marketing speak banded about as carmakers chase the green consciences and recession-hit wallets of potential buyers.

Some is hot air, but the word 'SkyActiv' on the back of the latest Mazda is a genuine statement of intent.

Like many in the industry, Mazda is not convinced that hybrid and electric powertrains are (yet) the answer to driving down fossil fuel consumption and emissions.

They are also ruinously expensive to develop yet the new technology's market penetration is still limited, so the progressive Japanese marque has opted to squeeze as much as possible from the internal combustion engine by re-thinking the whole car thing.

This means shaving weight in every department, making the car as aerodynamic as possible, reducing friction in the engine and mechanicals and looking for big powertrain efficiencies.

And the working prototype for this SkyActiv brainstorming is an all-new Mazda model, the CX-5 crossover or compact SUV, launched in the summer.

It's an impressive and good-looking car too, which bodes well for SkyActiv's later application to Mazda's more mainstream models and the next generation of the legendary MX-5 sports car.

The CX-5 (from £21,395) feels light on its feet even in full 4x4 format – you can also have it in front-wheel drive only, to eke out even more economy – and comes with three highly efficient engine choices: a 2.2-litre diesel offering 150PS (148bhp) or 175PS (173bhp) and a 165PS (163bhp) low emission 2.0-litre petrol unit.

The test car was a flagship 175PS diesel with a slick six-speed automatic allowing 51.4mpg on the official combined cycle and modest CO2 emissions for this class of 144g/km.

While we may all be used to the revolution in diesel refinement, this unit is a paragon of the

FLIGHT AND FANCY:

The impressive CX-5 boasts Mazda's new SkyActiv technology, the carmaker's answer to reducing fossil fuel usage and emissions, and offers a smart compact SUV that is sure to make a big impression on the sector modern type, being smooth and free-revving,

This makes it a relaxed motorway drive, no doubt helped by the slippery and great design of the car as well as some effective sound-deadening – not that you hear much from the diesel even when standing outside the car.

The car needs just a light touch around tortuous country lanes too, where it definitely stakes a claim as one of the few real driver's cars in the small SUV segment, even if its low weight perhaps makes ride quality slightly susceptible to increasingly tatty rural road surfaces.

It's inside the CX-5 that the deal is made or broken though.

Some buyers will see the enormous cabin with great legroom as the clincher, and it's not bought at the expense of a modest boot; the CX-5 has one of the biggest in class and Mazda's much-mimicked one-touch folding release for the rear seats aids flexibility.

Five are also seated in comfort, with decent elbow room for whoever sits midships in the back, even if he or she has to perch on a narrow seat that can fold independently of its neighbours to accommodate long objects loaded through from the boot.

But other would-be buyers may be a touch underwhelmed by the interior; it's well-arranged with good stowage, but looks and feels a bit cheap for a car hammering on the door of the premium segment with its sharp styling and technology, eco credentials and, unfortunately, steep pricing.

Okay, Mazda's profitability here is probably squeezed by the strength of the Yen so the CX-5 can't help but have a premium price, but you cannot help thinking that the Korean duo – Hyundai and Kia – have raised their game so high on interiors that they are putting not just Mazda, but most Japanese rivals to shame.

Nevertheless, this is a progressive car worthy of anyone's crossover/SUV shortlist

Round seven for VW's Golf

ORDER books are open for the new seventh generation VW Golf, arriving at dealers on January 7, 2013.

Prices start below those of the previous model, at £16,285, yet the new car is claimed to be lighter, safer, more advanced, more spacious, more efficient and better equipped than before.

Sporty GTI and frugal BlueMotion models join the line-up later in 2013.

Outdoor takes on A6 AllRoad

SKODA might be about to upset premium sister brand Audi with a cut-price version of the latter's A6 AllRoad.

The Superb Outdoor (from £26,465) is a comfortable and practical car for the winter, wearing protective strips on the doors, bumpers and wheel arches.

It also rides on big 18-inch alloys and has permanent all-wheel drive for extra traction in ice, snow or rain.

Fiesta Ford's used car star

FORD took four honours at this year's prestigious What Car? Used Car awards including top prize for the Fiesta (pictured) – also the UK's top-selling new car.

Judges praised its value as a pre-owned vehicle, refinement and ability to put a smile on any driver's face.

The Ford Mondeo was judged winner of the family category for the second year running.

British-built Toyota Auris shows brand's new spirit

By Steve Loader
editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

FORD'S decision to close its last remaining vehicle production plant – for the Transit van – removes the fig leaf hiding its long-lost status as a major UK car producer.

And this can only be good news for Japanese brands like Toyota, which are pumping money and jobs into the British economy.

The point is well made by the all-new Auris family hatchback (from £14,495) arriving in a few weeks and built at the brand's Derbyshire plant, which also produces the bigger Avensis.

It also marks a change of tack for Toyota, which has ensured that its latest contender in the hard-fought family hatch sector is lower, more aerodynamic and stylish than before.

The firm tried to change its fortunes in this arena before by axing the old Corolla name – for which the market had habitually read “dependable, but dull” – replacing it with the Auris, but more of the same.

So, belatedly realising it takes more than a name change to change public perception, Toyota has gone for it and included a smart and dynamic new front end tipped to become the Japanese number one's new corporate face.

The newcomer is said to be a much better drive; lighter, better looking inside, as well as even more efficient – a petrol-electric Auris Hybrid flagship is offered once more and one with style thrown in.

But if Toyota has taken its eye off the visual stuff over the past few years in order to focus on efficiencies and, particularly hybrid power, that doesn't mean the latter will be neglected this time around; the new Auris Hybrid has a bigger boot than before as the battery pack has been re-positioned beneath the rear seats.

Apart from the hybrid, the Auris will be offered with 1.33 and 1.6-litre petrol engines and a 1.4-litre diesel. A crisp looking estate version, the Auris Touring Sports will also appear shortly and become the first small family estate car offered with a full hybrid powertrain.

Also arriving soon is an updated version of Toyota's practical seven-seat Verso MPV, which gets the new corporate nose too.

And it seems Toyota has beaten an unhealthy obsession with all things green; it used to glamourise its mainstream range with sporting stablemates such as the MR2, Celica and Supra.

But then came the Japanese car giant's promotion of the hybrid; laudable, of course, but where did those sporting halo cars go?

Finally, Toyota woke up and has launched the wonderfully retro GT86 sports coupé with rear-wheel drive. It's doing wonders for a once lacklustre image and shows a new brand confidence.

4x4 Buyer's Guide

Interest in sector soars ahead of winter

By Steve Loader

ANY bets against us having a foul winter after a dismal summer?

To add to the odds in favour we must also acknowledge we have had a run of winters with more than a dash of snow and ice, despite the relative dryness of last winter, which prompted an un-seasonally early hosepipe ban.

We also need to reckon with the deterioration of Kent roads, caught between several tarmac-cracking winters and budget cutbacks – despite County Hall's increased repairs programme.

So it's perhaps no wonder that the arrival of the traditional 4x4 vehicle buying season looms larger than usual, also highlighting a reconciliation with the type, which once earned a bad reputation with consumers as wasteful gas guzzlers when the economy took a downturn.

From being the fashionable darlings of city dwellers who liked to suggest that they were country people, they were suddenly cast as the villains of the piece. But even 4x4s have got greener as the buying public grapples with its eco-conscience as well as that other eco – economy, forced upon us all by the recession.

There are also so many shades of 4x4 vehicles now too, ranging from big and beefy go anywhere true off-roaders, down to so-called 'soft-roaders' or SUVs; the latter might not have the ground clearance, but drive to all four wheels can kick in for extra grip when it matters, and they're cheaper to buy and run too.

The breakthrough has been the arrival of more economical, but punchy diesel engines and cheaper all-wheel drive systems, allowing the car to run in two-wheel drive most of the time, saving fuel, emissions and tyres, while automatically reverting to 4x4 if sensors recognise traction is being lost by any of the wheels.

At the top end though, 4x4 is usually permanent with true off-roaders and comes with two sets of gear ratios: one for normal conditions and a second and much lower set for extra power and traction when the going gets really tough.

Sometimes this is packaged as a system that allows selection of a mode according to terrain or conditions, leaving the car to work out the best gears and chassis set-up.

But bulk and grunt are not everything; weight can be a curse in tough situations; lighter 4x4s can be just as effective, providing there is enough ground clearance and you don't expect Herculean climbs in mud or snow.

4X4 GUIDE

DON'T ever think a 4x4 makes you invincible.

Yes, extra driving wheels and weight equals more traction when conventional cars are losing grip or sliding about, but a 4x4 can still skid if you do not treat treacherous conditions with respect.

What's more, the extra bulk of an off-roader can cause things to happen quickly if you overcook things.

So, our 10 top tips for when things get tricky:

- 1 Use dipped headlights – snow flakes or driving rain, like fog, will simply reflect light back at you.
- 2 Watch your speed – things happen fast on slippery surfaces. Keep a stopping distance equivalent to what is visible and clear ahead of you and do not follow the vehicle in front too closely. As a yardstick, stopping distances are ten times longer in snow and ice.
- 3 Softly does it – gentle use of the accelerator, brakes, clutch and steering prevents loss of control. Avoid wheel-spin when pulling away by selecting 2nd gear and easing in the clutch.
- 4 If the car has a specific mode for the driving conditions, then select it – the onboard computer thinks and reacts faster than you.
- 5 Right gear – anticipate gear changes ahead of a new gradient. Be in the right gear to start climbing rather than risk loss of control with a hurried change half way, and reduce the risk of a skid by selecting a lower gear on descent – first gear in the lowest set of ratios, if fitted, gives maximum control in tricky conditions. With an auto transmission without a manual override, there should be a 'low' drive or 'terrain control' option for snow and ice.

- 6 "Think high" on the flat – lower gears work best on gradients, but higher is best on level ground while a lower gear increases the car's torque or pulling power and, therefore, the chance of a skid from a clumsy foot on the accelerator.

- 7 Make sure that you clean feet – knock off snow, ice or mud from your boots/shoes in case they cause your feet to slip on the controls.

- 8 Clear before you go – remove snow and ice from the mirrors and windows for maximum visibility and clear the body-work and roof too to avoid snow sliding onto the windscreen and obscuring your view.

- 9 Enough fuel? – never set out in bad weather without adequate fuel. If forced to halt, you may need the spare fuel to keep the car heated until conditions improve or help arrives. Pack some drinks and provisions before leaving too.

- 10 Snow chains – if you intend driving to the Alps, you must pack them or risk a fine from the police and do check the vehicle's manual beforehand to determine which wheels you need to fit them on. Don't ever think a 4x4 can do without them if the going gets tough.

LOADS OF FUN: Multiple award-winner for towing is the Land Rover Discovery, but for a 4x4 on a budget Hyundai's big-selling ix35 (top right) hits the mark as does the economical seven-seat run Kia Sorento

By Steve Loader

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

BUYING a 4x4 is a no-brainer if you work on a farm, have to visit construction sites or live in a rural area where mud, ice and snow can make winter driving hazardous.

Some would-be buyers also need a 4x4 for towing; they can pull greater weights and all-wheel drive is a major reassurance when doing so.

On the other hand, they are not a cheap option if you rarely need the full 4x4 potential, which is why smaller and less expensive SUVs (sports utility vehicle) have evolved.

Which type to buy?

These deliver all the image and often just as much space as a top grade 4x4, but they are less costly to run, being lighter and usually equipped with an automatic all-wheel drive system that mostly runs in front-wheel drive, either by manual selection or by an automatic function – the latter diverts more power and grip to the rear wheels if onboard sensors decide that help is needed.

Then you must decide on the powertrain; diesel is the preferred choice as it gives good low down power when a 4x4 needs it – in other words, when the going gets tough. It's also better for fuel and emissions, but diesels can cost more upfront than petrol models, so you need to cover more miles to recoup the extra outlay via fuel savings.

Hybrids are also available and the forthcoming Range Rover hybrid will cause many rivals to re-think their strategy.

The economies of the hybrid format make more sense on bigger vehicles anyway.

Another question is: how many seats? Some models offer five or seven and best advice is to go for the latter if you can afford it as there will always be a time when you need those extra seats, and these cars tend to depreciate less as there is more secondhand demand.

In addition, cars designed to hold up to seven, are almost certain to have more load space too, but this means they may be bulkier than you need; for many people the attraction of modern SUVs is getting the 4x4 look without having to worry about parking at the supermarket.
